IF YOU THINK YOU'RE TOO YOUNG FOR ESTATE PLANNING, THINK AGAIN.

As soon as you have a child, the feeling of responsibility is overwhelming. There is so much to plan and prepare for and we realize that estate planning doesn't usually make that list. However, a big part of your responsibility as a parent is to ensure that your child's or children's lives have a clear and well thought out path, even in the case of an unforeseen event.

The benefits of estate planning for the young parent are a lot more poignant than for others. Younger children may have to live with decisions made for them for many years to come. The scenario in which a child's fate is left to be decided by the courts should be avoided at all costs.

In the unlikely event that you and your partner are no longer here and there is no planning in place, the process to decide critical issues for your children is daunting. There may be conflict among family members regarding the care of the children; there will be lengthy and expensive court proceedings. There may be inappropriate individuals appointed by the court to make decisions for your children that you never would want involved.

To add to this unfortunate situation is the idea that your children will be right in the middle of the turmoil, feeling unsettled at a time when security and peace should be the top priority.

You already know that your parents and grandparents need to consider Elder Law, but your children would want YOU to consider Younger Law.™

WE'VE GOT THE PERFECT 18th BIRTHDAY PRESENT FOR YOUR CHILD!

When your son or daughter turns 18, they need their own advance directives put in place, especially if they are going away to school. There are many unfortunate situations that could be made even worse if these documents do not exist. Accidents, sickness and lawsuits happen and being prepared can make the difference. When they turn 18, they should have their own: basic will, power of attorney, health care proxy and living will.

THIS IS NOT SOMETHING YOU SHOULD PUT OFF: CALL 631-234-3030 TODAY AND SPECIFICALLY ASK FOR The Younger Law™ PACKAGE.
